The Portuguese Journal of Dermatology, formerly called Revista da Sociedade Portuguesa de Dermatologia e Venereologia/Journal of the Portuguese Society of Dermatology and Venereology, is changing but continuing its long history of uninterrupted publication since the foundation of the Portuguese Society of Dermatology in 1942. It is now fully published in English, the universal language of Science, but it keeps a flavor of our Portuguese language in the titles, abstracts, and key words. We hope to recruit manuscripts from Portuguese speaking countries but ideally also from all over the world.

We are changing the publisher and the platform for the submission and revision of manuscripts, which will be performed under the supervision of a dedicated publisher, Permanyer Portugal, with whom we intend to keep a fruitful collaboration toward the indexation of the Portuguese Journal of Dermatology in PubMed Central. Furthermore, we count on our editorial board and all regular collaborators to keep the scientific level of the publications.

We take this opportunity to thank all the partners who have accompanied us for more than a decade of publication of the Journal of the Portuguese Society of Dermatology and Venereology: Isabel Oliveira from Sublinhado, responsible for the graphic work of the journal, Helena Donato, always pushing to comply with the most recent and highest standards in medical publication, Jose Carona Carvalho responsible for the website and advice on the publication, all the editorial teams preceding and accompanying us and all the authors who chose this journal to publish their work.

With the new publisher and all of you, readers, authors, and editorial team, let's embrace this new step forward.
